REPORT.

To the Select and Common Councils of the City of Philadelphia.

GENTLEMEN :

The Board of Directors of Girard College submit, through their President, their Annual Report for the year 1865.

And in doing so, they feel great pleasure in representing the condition of the Institution as in an eminent degree prosperous, and successfully engaged in carrying out the views of its benevolent Founder. The discipline of the College during the past year has sensibly improved ; and although it cannot be expected that among so large a number of pupils none shall be found obnoxious to censure, yet the occasions for exercising or enforcing severe measures in order to ensure obedience have been few, whilst good order has been the rule and not the exception. And yet the College has been and is subjected to influences calculated to deteriorate the character of its inmates, and to spread discontent and insubordination amongst them. Without the ability to select the recipients of this charity, or to discriminate between the applicants, it necessarily happens that some are admitted whose parentage and prior moral training have been of the lowest and most degraded character. Although introduced within its precincts at a very early age, the infection remains, and not unfrequently develops itself, despite all the efforts to give it a better direction. And even after the recipient has improved under the course of discipline to which he has been subjected, he is sometimes exposed to temptations on the part of relatives and friends to become insubordinate, originating from a desire to remove him from the Institution, in order that his services may be rendered available to them; and the discontent implanted from this selfish cause occasionally breaks out into open violation of rule, and an attempt to be freed from the restraints to which those under our charge are necessarily subjected.

During the past year, whilst there has been no lack of kindness exercised towards the pupils, and every effort has been made to win obedience by gentle and not by harsh methods, every flagrant violation of discipline has been sternly and promptly rebuked. In two or three cases of gross delinquency, when crime was actually perpetrated, calculated to endanger the lives of others, even the severest measures have been resorted to, and the guilty parties have been promptly handed over to the House of Refuge. These examples have been productive of a most salutary influence, and, as the result, it may be truthfully said, that the discipline of the household is as perfect as could be expected. The pupils seem contented and happy. Efforts have been made, as far as practicable, to add as much as possible a home influence to the necessary mental and moral training bestowed. And although it is difficult to secure such an influence in its largest and fullest extent, yet what has been done has tended to render less burdensome the restraint which a seclusion from the world necessarily engenders.

This home-like influence is most effectually brought to bear upon the youngest members of the little community gathered within our walls. Both at school and when relieved from the task of learning, every effort is made to render their time pleasant and agreeable. Free scope is given to their natural longing for recreation, by innocent diversion of all kinds, and whether by play or games, or the reading of appropriate books to them, or by teaching them songs and hymns, they are made to feel that those who are entrusted with their care are desirous to render the instruction conveyed pleasing as well as profitable. And whilst amongst the most cherished recollections of after days are those which cluster around the domestic hearth, and the lessons longest remembered are those impressed upon the youthful mind by a loving father or mother, so we doubt not that many of those under our care will turn back to their earliest years of college life as the most delightful in their youthful history.

A powerful adjunct in maintaining this discipline, is the regular moral instruction afforded on every suitable occasion, as well by those who have charge of the pupils from day to day, as by prayers, accompanied with hymns and the reading of the bible every morning and evening, and the more protracted services held twice on every Sunday in the Chapel. Whilst all sectarian views are rigidly excluded, the sacred teachings of the Bible are inculcated, as furnishing for the guidance of the pupils the purest system of morals, in accordance with the views expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States in interpreting the wishes of the donor, as set forth in his will.

The condition of the College, so far as its educational interests are concerned, is equally favorable. The course of studies assigned to the various classes has been thoroughly carried out, and the improvement on the part of those showing any disposition to avail themselves of the advantages afforded them is marked and encouraging. And here, too, a difficulty is experienced of a different character, but no less detrimental to the improvement of the intellectual powers of all who come within the sphere of our influence, as that which has been adverted to under the head of discipline is hostile to their improvement in the way of training. The mental qualifications of the applicants for admission are as little under the control of the Directors as their moral, and the consequence necessarily is, that great inequality of ability and talent is soon discovered amongst those who must be ranked together in the same class, by reason of age, or the previous course of studies pursued. Many whose conduct is found unexceptionable, are deficient in every element necessary to create a thorough scholar, and sometimes unable to keep pace with those with whom they are necessarily associated. Consequently they become dead weights in every class; and whilst they depress the energies of others, they themselves are apt to lose any determination they may have made, to overcome by diligent and persevering application, their natural deficiency.

Care has been taken and plans adopted to prevent, as far as possible, the injurious effects arising from the association of those who are able and ready to learn, from the idle, the worthless, and the stupid. The classes of honor in this respect have accomplished a good purpose. Many have their ambition roused to share in their privileges, who otherwise would have bestowed but little labor upon their daily studies. And by means of the working class the pernicious influence of those who are incompetent, either from a negligence or laziness, not to be overcome by any discipline, or from a deficiency of natural ability, is counteracted and rendered harmless.

It may thus be stated, as the result of the year, that the course of education has been faithfully pursued, and that the result has been gratifying to as great a degree as can be reasonably expected. The President of the College, who has ever evinced a desire to carry out the wishes of the Board, and has faithfully administered the general government of the College in all its departments, reports, as the result of the year 1865, "that at no time, after an experience of two years and a-half has he seen so tractable and contented a spirit in the pupils, or so earnest and harmonious a co-operation on the part of all the officers of the College, in their efforts to produce the happy results which crown the arduous labors of the year."

At the close of the year the annual distribution was made of the customary prizes, under the supervision of the Committee of Discipline and Discharge. Fifty-three premiums were distributed for distinguished merit in scholarship and deportment, to as many successful candidates for the honor. The highest premium—a good silver watch—was awarded to Thomas B. Prosser, of the third form, who had also been successful in securing a similar mark of distinction the preceding year. The working of the classes of honor and their beneficial effect, is further seen from the fact that ten are enrolled in the highest or third degree, forty-six in the second, and fifty-seven in the first; these comprise the larger boys. The Junior Class of Honor embraces thirty-nine, to which must be added the candidates for distinction now on probation, whose rights will hereafter be determined, thirty-three in number, making a total of two hundred and twenty-five entitled to honorable distinction out of a population of about five hundred, or nearly one-half of the whole number; and we point to this as indicative of the general good condition of the whole Institution. Nor are these distinctions conferred without great care being bestowed in the selection of those deemed worthy of them. They are subjected to a probationary trial and invited to compete for admission into the favored circle, and that admission cannot be secured until no dissenting voice is raised by those who have in charge their educational as well as their bodily training. Good scholarship, without good conduct in the household, is of no avail, and both must be joined and the assent of those to whom each department is entrusted, must be had, to produce the desired result. In distributing these prizes, it was pleasing to discover that the tokens of approbation bestowed upon those who received the two highest, had been impartially dispensed, by the loud and prolonged applause which greeted the announcement of their names, at the hands of their fellow-students.

During the year 1865 no new pupils were admitted into the College. Anxious as the Board of Directors are and ever have been, to extend the benefits of the Institution as widely as possible, the financial condition of the country, producing a rise in almost every article of consumption necessary in the household, rendered it impossible to admit others, or even to fill the vacancies of those who left the Institution during the year. The Board are sensible of the fact, that the applicants now seeking admission are generally of the most meritorious character, the orphans, many of them, of parents who shed their blood for the life of the Republic, and yet ordinary prudence dictates that until the resources of the Institution are more ample, or the articles of daily consumption are nearer the standard of former years, no more can be accommodated, until the number of the inmates is so far reduced as to warrant it. On the first of January, 1865, there were on the rolls of the College 563 pupils. During the year, 33 were indentured to various trades; the indentures of seven were cancelled; eight were deprived, by expulsion, of the benefits of the Institution; four died; one was removed to the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, and one is at large, who absconded from his master whilst on trial with him, leaving 509 pupils on the rolls of the College on the first of January, 1866; and every effort will be made, consistently with the duty we owe to those under our charge, to bind out, as rapidly as possible, such as have come to the proper age, in order, if possible, to prepare the way for the admission of others whose claims are worthy of consideration.

The difficulty of finding suitable places for our pupils as apprentices seems to increase, instead of being diminished. Since the time at which Mr. Girard's Will was framed, the whole system of apprenticeship, as it then existed, has practically been broken up. As a necessary result, masters are unwilling to take the responsibilities which, in years gone by, were expected of them; and the position of an apprentice being rendered derogatory in popular estimation, neither side are prepared to enter into the relation. The contaminating influences of such sentiments are speedily felt, and however a boy may be inclined at first to submit to the dictates and authority of a master disposed to do his duty, he soon is tempted to regard himself as bound by a restraint from which he should be free, and to consider the terms of his indenture as those of an unmeaning contract, and one from which every effort should be made on his part to be liberated. Notwithstanding these hindrances, however, the directions of the Will are being carried out as far, and with as good an effect, as can reasonably be expected.

Among the studies which Mr. Girard desires should be pursued, navigation has presented the greatest difficulties, since few masters of vessels are now willing to take apprentices, or to receive into their employment any others than those whom they can retain or discharge, as fancy or interest may dictate. During the last year, however, an opportunity was presented, which appeared to the Board calculated to carry out the views of the Founder of the College, whilst, at the same time, it subserved the public interests. The United States opened a School for Naval apprentices, and after the subject was deliberated by the Directors, it was resolved to take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded, to add the science of practical navigation to the other openings given for apprenticeship, to those attaining the requisite age under the terms of Mr. Girard's Will. Five pupils were selected out of a number eager to go into this new sphere of labor, and by their own consent, and as far as consistent with the provisions of the Will, with the consent of their nearest relatives, were handed over to those having charge of this department of our Naval service. The result, so far, has been encouraging. Only one of them has proved himself unworthy of the position, whilst the rest have received the commendation of those to whom they have been entrusted, and some of them for good conduct rewarded by promotion into higher classes than those they originally entered.

A firm attachment to the principles of our Republican institutions is also one of the topics which Mr. Girard desired should be impressed upon the minds of those who should participate in his bounty. This branch of education has not been neglected, and as a practical exhibition of the permanency and vitality of the labors of those whose duty it is to train them in this department, it may be stated that, during the late unhappy contest in our own country, a large number of our pupils were found contending upon the side of the Union, many of whom sacrificed their lives in earnest efforts to maintain the perpetuity of our Republican Government. The recurrence of the Anniversary of our National Independence during the year just passed, was deemed a fitting opportunity to express our gratitude to a wise and over-ruling Providence, in preserving our country from the baneful influences of treason, and restoring peace and harmony to our distracted land. The day was accordingly marked with a more elaborate celebration than had been wont to distinguish it, and the effort was made to impress upon the minds of our youthful community, how sacred and inestimable are the rights which they enjoy as American citizens.

During the past year, Professor Stephens, who occupied the Chair of History and English Literature, resigned his position, having been elected as Professor of Chemistry in the Central High School. His place has been filled by the election of Mr. Hiram Corson, who was inaugurated on the 29th of March, 1865.

The health of the pupils is a matter which, in the general administration of the College, affords no small anxiety to those who have them in charge. However well and faithfully the Physicians of our Institution may labor in the discharge of their duties, no foresight or precaution can exempt us from the presence of such diseases as are contagious in their character, or arise from a malarious cause existing in the atmosphere. In the early part of the year, several cases of low typhus or spotted fever made their appearance, and naturally occasioned great anxiety, lest such diseases should become prevalent amongst the inmates generally. We must here gratefully acknowledge the blessings which, in this respect, our household received at the hands of our Heavenly Father, for although several were alarmingly ill, but few were removed by death, the whole number for the year being, from all causes, only four. One of them, thus seriously ill, on recovering, was found to be entirely deprived of the power of hearing, and after retaining him for a short period, nothing remained but to transfer him to the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb. During the latter portion of the year we were blessed with an unusual degree of health; on several occasions but few or any cases were found requiring any particular attention, whilst sometimes the infirmary did not contain either any patient at all, or any sick enough to be in bed.

A close examination of this magnificent charity is requisite in order fully to appreciate its beneficent results. It is easy to say that it is a comfortable home for five or six hundred orphans, but when it is remembered that the vast majority of these are gathered from positions in life from whence their removal to this College, is an elevation and not a depression of their social condition, and as to the rest, that it offers them an asylum when the head of the household has been taken away and poverty comes in the train of death, that they are well clad and taken care of, and furnished with an education of the most solid and comprehensive character, and suited to their several capacities, that every possible precaution is used to ensure to each of them a good and competent master when the period of apprenticeship arrives, then and only then do the comprehensiveness and practical working of this charity appear in their proper magnitude. It may take time to disclose its full measure of usefulness and kindly influence upon the community in which it is located, but those best acquainted with its object and aim, look hopefully to the future for the entire consummation of all that it is capable of accomplishing.

All which is respectfully submitted on behalf of the Board of Directors, by

CHAS. E. LEX,
President.
